

Many an ordinary evening in New Haven have I lingered, flanked by East and West Rocks (not cited by poets a la Sleeping Giant in close Mount Caramel) Since

I was on the ground, didn't note especially that lift and light and turn of magic air informing natural ideas,

but rather seized the pain handed to children in the myth of any place

With a someone describing a treatment at Saint Raphael's Hospital: a kind of barbed metallic snake twisted deep down the pecker of a sinful acquaintance:

"You could hear him screaming up on East Rock!" (or West) So went the usual lesson. It's not at such times astounding, the mere feel of air.
